NEXORA TECHNOLOGIES

EMPLOYEE HANDBOOK 2025

People, policies and workplace practices

Fictional company • Fictional policies • Training and RAG evaluation use only

Version 1.0 | Effective 1 January 2025
Controlled copy: People Operations

Contents

This handbook is organised into 25 policy chapters. Each chapter includes an overview and practical application guidance.

01. Welcome and purpose

02. About Nexora

03. Employment principles and equal opportunity

04. Recruitment and selection

05. Joining and onboarding

06. Employment categories and probation

07. Working hours and attendance

08. Remote and hybrid work

09. Leave framework

10. Annual leave and carry-forward

11. Sick and casual leave

12. Parental and family leave

13. Public holidays and shutdowns

14. Compensation and payroll

15. Bonus and incentives

16. Overtime and compensatory time

17. Travel and expense reimbursement

18. Performance management

19. Learning and career development

20. Promotion, transfer and mobility

21. Code of conduct and conflicts

22. Respectful workplace and prevention of harassment

23. Grievances and speak-up process

24. Health, safety and wellbeing

25. Information security and acceptable use

26. Privacy, records and artificial intelligence

27. Customer service and quality

28. Discipline, investigations and corrective action

29. Resignation, notice and separation

30. Policy administration and definitions

Policy schedule

Key year-specific entitlements and thresholds are summarised in Chapter 25 and in the relevant policy chapters. Always use the edition year shown on the cover.

CHAPTER 01

Welcome and purpose

Policy overview and employee expectations

The handbook explains the employment practices, workplace standards and support processes used by Nexora Technologies Private Limited. It is designed to help employees understand what the company expects and what employees can expect in return. It is a practical guide, not a substitute for an individual employment agreement or a formal legal opinion.

Employees should read the sections relevant to their role and ask People Operations when a rule is unclear. Managers are responsible for applying policies consistently, documenting exceptions and directing employees to the correct process. Where a signed employment agreement or a mandatory legal requirement gives an employee a more favourable or different entitlement, the applicable agreement or law will prevail.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

The handbook applies to permanent, fixed-term and eligible probationary employees unless a section says otherwise. Contractors, consultants, interns and agency workers may be covered by selected workplace, safety, confidentiality and technology rules, but their commercial agreements determine other benefits. Policy owners may publish procedures, forms and FAQs to explain how a policy works in practice.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Bengaluru is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 02

About Nexora

Policy overview and employee expectations

Nexora is a fictional Indian technology and consulting organisation delivering data engineering, enterprise applications, analytics, cloud operations and managed support services. The company serves customers in India and overseas. Its teams include engineering, consulting, sales, finance, people operations, information security and corporate services.

The company aims to create a respectful, dependable and learning-oriented workplace. Employees are expected to protect customer trust, share information responsibly, work collaboratively and raise concerns early. The company aims to make decisions using documented criteria rather than personal preference. Business requirements may differ by client, project, location and role, so some teams may have approved local operating procedures.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

The Bengaluru office is the principal administrative location. Hyderabad, Mumbai and Pune are additional work locations. Employees assigned to customer sites must follow both Nexora rules and the customer's lawful site requirements. If requirements conflict, employees should pause and seek guidance from their manager or People Operations rather than making assumptions.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Hyderabad is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 03

Employment principles and equal opportunity

Policy overview and employee expectations

Nexora makes employment decisions based on role requirements, capability, performance, conduct and business needs. The company does not tolerate unlawful discrimination, harassment, retaliation or unfair treatment. Recruitment, training, pay, promotion, work allocation and separation decisions should be supported by relevant and documented reasons.

Employees who believe they have experienced unfair treatment may raise the matter with their manager, People Operations or the designated grievance channel. A concern may be raised in good faith even if the employee is uncertain whether a policy has been breached. Reports will be handled sensitively, shared only with people who need the information and assessed without prejudging the outcome.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

Managers must avoid favouritism and disclose relationships or conflicts that could affect a decision. Reasonable workplace adjustments may be considered where appropriate and supported by operational feasibility and applicable requirements. Retaliation against a person who raises a concern, participates in an investigation or requests an adjustment is prohibited.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Mumbai is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 04

Recruitment and selection

Policy overview and employee expectations

Open roles are approved by the relevant business leader and People Operations before recruitment begins. Job descriptions should state the principal responsibilities, required skills, reporting line, location and employment type. Selection may include interviews, work samples, technical assessments, reference checks and verification steps relevant to the role.

Candidates should provide accurate information about qualifications, experience, work eligibility and other information reasonably required for the role. Any collection of personal information must follow the company's privacy and retention procedures. Interviewers should use job-related criteria, record material observations and avoid questions unrelated to the role or prohibited by applicable law.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

An offer is valid only when issued through an authorised company representative. Verbal discussions do not change an offer letter. Changes to title, compensation, joining date, location or reporting line must be documented. Recruitment agencies and referral sources must not promise employment or benefits on behalf of Nexora.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Pune is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 05

Joining and onboarding

Policy overview and employee expectations

New employees must complete joining formalities by the date communicated by People Operations. These may include identity and qualification verification, bank and tax details, emergency contacts, signed employment documents, confidentiality acknowledgements and required policy training. Employees should provide complete and accurate information and promptly report any change.

Managers should provide a role introduction, access to relevant systems, initial objectives, team contacts and a practical onboarding plan. System access should be limited to what the employee needs for their work. Employees must not share passwords or use another person's credentials to bypass access controls.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

People Operations maintains the official employee record. Employees should review their profile and notify People Operations of corrections to contact, address, bank or emergency information. Delays in providing required documents may delay payroll setup, benefit enrolment or access provisioning.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Bengaluru is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 06

Employment categories and probation

Policy overview and employee expectations

Nexora may engage employees on permanent, fixed-term or probationary arrangements. The employment letter states the applicable category, role, compensation, location, notice requirements and any probation period. Interns and trainees may be governed by separate letters and programme rules.

During probation, the manager should clarify expectations, provide feedback and assess role fit, quality, collaboration, attendance and conduct. Confirmation is communicated in writing. Completion of a probation period does not by itself change the terms of employment unless the company issues the relevant confirmation or amendment.

For the 2025 edition, the following operating point applies: The standard probation period is 4 months; one extension of up to 2 months may be approved in writing.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

A fixed-term arrangement ends on the date stated in the agreement unless renewed in writing. Renewal is not automatic. Employees who are unsure of their category or confirmation status should contact People Operations. Managers must not make informal promises that conflict with the signed employment terms.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Hyderabad is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 07

Working hours and attendance

Policy overview and employee expectations

Working hours are determined by the employment letter, team schedule, client commitments and applicable requirements. Employees should be available during agreed collaboration hours, attend scheduled meetings and record attendance using the approved system. Different teams may operate staggered schedules to support customer coverage.

Employees should notify their manager as early as reasonably possible if they will be late, absent or unable to attend a scheduled shift. Attendance records must be accurate. Employees must not ask another person to mark attendance on their behalf or alter a time record without an authorised correction process.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

Managers should monitor workload and attendance patterns fairly, discuss recurring issues privately and consider approved flexibility or adjustments. Attendance data is used for workforce planning, payroll inputs, compliance and operational continuity. Questions about a time entry should be raised promptly so the record can be reviewed.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Mumbai is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 08

Remote and hybrid work

Policy overview and employee expectations

Remote or hybrid work is a work arrangement, not an automatic entitlement. Approval depends on role suitability, customer commitments, team coverage, performance, information-security requirements and the employee's work location. The manager and People Operations may review an arrangement when business needs change.

Employees working remotely must maintain a safe and reasonably private workspace, protect company information, use approved devices and remain reachable during agreed working hours. Sensitive conversations should not be held where they can be overheard. Public Wi-Fi should be avoided unless an approved secure connection is used.

For the 2025 edition, the following operating point applies: Up to 3 remote-working days per week may be approved for eligible roles, subject to team coverage and manager approval.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

Employees must not work from another country or an unapproved location without written clearance because tax, immigration, security and customer obligations may be affected. The company may require office attendance for training, collaboration, audits or customer work with reasonable notice.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Pune is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 09

Leave framework

Policy overview and employee expectations

Leave is intended to support rest, health, family responsibilities and personal needs while allowing teams to plan customer and operational coverage. Leave categories, annual entitlements, accrual rules, carry-forward limits and approval requirements are set out in this section and the applicable leave schedule.

Employees should submit planned leave through the HR system and obtain approval before making non-refundable arrangements. Managers should consider the employee's entitlement, team coverage, fairness, critical deadlines and any protected or statutory leave rights. Emergency or unexpected absence should be reported as soon as practicable.

For the 2025 edition, the following operating point applies: For 2025, the standard schedule provides 20 working days per completed leave year annual leave, 10 days sick leave days and 6 days casual leave days.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

Leave balances shown in the HR system are administrative records and should be checked periodically. If a balance appears incorrect, the employee should raise a ticket with People Operations and provide supporting dates or approvals. Leave should not be assumed approved until the system or manager confirms it.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Bengaluru is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 10

Annual leave and carry-forward

Policy overview and employee expectations

Annual leave is intended for planned rest and personal time. Employees should give reasonable notice, coordinate handovers and avoid accumulating leave without discussing a plan with their manager. Approval is subject to business coverage, but managers should not unreasonably prevent employees from using accrued entitlement.

Carry-forward is subject to the annual cap stated in the policy schedule. Amounts above the cap may lapse at the end of the leave year unless an approved exception or applicable requirement says otherwise. Employees should check their balance before year-end and plan leave early where possible.

For the 2025 edition, the following operating point applies: The 2025 annual leave schedule is 20 working days per completed leave year; the carry-forward limit is 7 days unused days, subject to the applicable rules.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

On separation, treatment of unused annual leave is determined by the employment terms and applicable requirements. Employees should not assume that all leave categories are encashable. People Operations will calculate eligible balances using the official leave ledger and the employee's last working date.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Hyderabad is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 11

Sick and casual leave

Policy overview and employee expectations

Sick leave supports an employee's health needs and recovery. Employees should notify their manager promptly when illness prevents them from working. The company may request reasonable supporting documentation where permitted by policy and applicable requirements, particularly for extended or repeated absence.

Casual leave is intended for short-notice personal matters that cannot reasonably be planned far in advance. Employees should provide as much notice as practical. Managers should apply the policy consistently and avoid requesting unnecessary personal details.

For the 2025 edition, the following operating point applies: The 2025 schedule provides 10 days sick leave days and 6 days casual leave days as separate categories.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

Sick and casual leave are separate from annual leave unless the policy schedule expressly allows a permitted adjustment. Employees should not work while unwell if doing so creates a health or safety risk. People Operations can explain documentation, privacy and leave-coding requirements.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Mumbai is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 12

Parental and family leave

Policy overview and employee expectations

Nexora recognises that employees may need time away from work for childbirth, adoption, childcare and family care. Eligibility, duration, pay treatment and documentation are governed by applicable law, the employee's employment terms and the company's policy schedule.

Employees should contact People Operations as early as practical to discuss expected dates, handover planning, required forms and any workplace adjustments. Medical or family information will be handled confidentially and shared only where necessary to administer the leave or meet a legal obligation.

For the 2025 edition, the following operating point applies: Maternity leave is administered in accordance with applicable statutory requirements; eligible non-birthing partners receive 10 working days of paid partner leave.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

Managers should plan temporary coverage without penalising an employee for taking approved protected leave. On return, the manager should discuss priorities, access, schedule and any approved transition arrangements. Employees should raise concerns about unfair treatment or retaliation through the grievance process.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Pune is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 13

Public holidays and shutdowns

Policy overview and employee expectations

The company publishes a location-specific holiday calendar each year. The calendar may differ by state, office, customer site and operational team. Employees should consult the calendar applicable to their assigned work location rather than relying on a general list.

Some customer support or managed-service teams may need holiday coverage. Where employees are rostered to work on a holiday, the applicable compensatory rest or payment treatment will be communicated in advance and administered under the relevant rules.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

A company shutdown, if announced, will specify dates, affected teams and how the period is treated for leave and payroll purposes. Employees should not assume that a customer shutdown automatically creates a company holiday.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Bengaluru is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 14

Compensation and payroll

Policy overview and employee expectations

Compensation is set out in the employment letter and any subsequent written amendment. Salary components may include fixed pay, variable pay, allowances and employer-provided benefits. The structure may differ by role, grade, location and employment category.

Payroll is processed monthly using approved employee records, attendance inputs, eligible leave, authorised deductions and other verified changes. Employees should review their payslip and report a suspected error promptly. Corrections may require supporting records and may be processed in a subsequent payroll cycle.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

Employees must keep bank and tax details current. Unauthorised deductions, informal salary changes or promises of guaranteed variable pay are not permitted. Compensation information should be treated as personal information, while employees retain any rights they have under applicable law.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Hyderabad is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 15

Bonus and incentives

Policy overview and employee expectations

Variable compensation, sales incentives and performance awards are governed by the relevant plan document. A plan should state eligibility, measurement period, performance criteria, approval authority, payment timing and treatment on transfer or separation.

Employees should review the plan applicable to their role and ask the plan owner about targets or calculations they do not understand. Managers must not promise an incentive that has not been approved. Adjustments for customer cancellations, refunds, compliance breaches or data corrections must follow the plan rules.

For the 2025 edition, the following operating point applies: Eligible employees receive approved overtime compensation at 1.5 times the ordinary hourly rate, or approved compensatory time where permitted.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

Unless a plan expressly states otherwise, an incentive is not guaranteed merely because a target appears in a dashboard or informal discussion. The company may correct a calculation where source data is inaccurate, subject to documented review and applicable requirements.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Mumbai is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 16

Overtime and compensatory time

Policy overview and employee expectations

Overtime should be planned and approved before it is worked, except where an urgent operational issue makes prior approval impracticable. Employees should record actual additional hours accurately. Managers are responsible for reviewing business need, fatigue risk and appropriate recovery time.

Eligibility for overtime pay or compensatory time depends on role classification, location, customer arrangement and applicable requirements. Employees should not assume that every additional hour creates an entitlement. The policy schedule and employment terms explain the applicable treatment.

For the 2025 edition, the following operating point applies: Expense claims should be submitted within 45 calendar days of the transaction.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

Managers should monitor repeated overtime and address the underlying workload rather than treating extended hours as normal. Employees should raise concerns if they are pressured to work unrecorded hours or if time records do not reflect actual work.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Pune is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 17

Travel and expense reimbursement

Policy overview and employee expectations

Business travel must have a clear work purpose and the required approval before booking. Employees should use preferred booking channels where available, select reasonable options and comply with customer-site and travel-security instructions.

Expense claims must be accurate, itemised and supported by receipts or other acceptable evidence. Claims should be submitted within the stated period and identify the business purpose, dates, project or cost centre. Personal expenses, penalties, upgrades without approval and duplicate claims are not reimbursable.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

Managers should review claims for business purpose, policy compliance and completeness. Finance may request clarification or reject unsupported items. Employees must not split transactions or misdescribe expenses to avoid approval limits.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Bengaluru is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 18

Performance management

Policy overview and employee expectations

Performance management is an ongoing process involving goals, feedback, coaching and periodic review. Objectives should be relevant to the role, measurable where practical and aligned with team priorities. Employees should understand how their work will be assessed.

Reviews may consider delivery, quality, customer impact, collaboration, learning, reliability and conduct. Managers should provide specific examples and discuss both strengths and development needs. Employees may add comments or request clarification where they disagree with an assessment.

For the 2025 edition, the following operating point applies: Annual learning support is up to ■25,000 per eligible employee, subject to approval.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

A performance rating is not an automatic promise of promotion, bonus or salary increase. Material performance concerns should be communicated in a timely manner with a reasonable opportunity to respond and improve, consistent with the applicable process.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Hyderabad is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 19

Learning and career development

Policy overview and employee expectations

Nexora encourages continuous learning through internal sessions, mentoring, approved courses, certifications and project experience. Development activities should support business capability and employee growth. Access may depend on budget, role relevance and operational coverage.

Employees seeking training should discuss the learning objective with their manager and follow the approval and reimbursement process before enrolling. Where the company funds a certification or course, the employee may be asked to share completion evidence or practical learning with the team.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

Managers should consider development opportunities fairly and avoid allocating them solely through informal networks. Employees are responsible for applying learned skills, maintaining any required professional credentials and following rules for use of training materials.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Mumbai is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 20

Promotion, transfer and mobility

Policy overview and employee expectations

Promotion decisions consider sustained performance, role scope, demonstrated capability, business need and the availability of an approved position. Time in role may be considered but does not guarantee advancement. Employees may discuss career aspirations with their manager during review conversations.

Transfers may occur between teams, projects or locations based on employee interest and business requirements. A transfer should be documented and should clarify the effective date, reporting line, responsibilities, location and any compensation or schedule changes.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

Managers should coordinate handovers and access changes when an employee moves. Employees must not retain access to systems or customer information that is no longer required for their role.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Pune is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 21

Code of conduct and conflicts

Policy overview and employee expectations

Employees must act honestly, respectfully and in the company's legitimate business interests. They must avoid bribery, fraud, theft, falsification, misuse of company resources and conduct that damages customer trust. Gifts, hospitality and outside interests must comply with the applicable approval rules.

A conflict of interest may arise where personal, family, financial or outside business interests could influence work decisions. Employees should disclose actual, potential or perceived conflicts promptly. Disclosure allows the company to assess safeguards; it does not automatically mean wrongdoing.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

Employees must not use confidential information or company opportunities for personal gain. Managers should document decisions involving a disclosed conflict and seek compliance guidance where needed. Suspected misconduct should be reported through an approved channel.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Bengaluru is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 22

Respectful workplace and prevention of harassment

Policy overview and employee expectations

Nexora is committed to a workplace free from harassment, bullying, intimidation and retaliation. This includes conduct in offices, customer sites, work travel, online meetings, messaging platforms and work-related events. A person need not intend harm for conduct to have an unacceptable impact.

Employees may report concerns to People Operations, the designated committee or another authorised channel. Reports will be assessed promptly and fairly. The company may take interim steps to protect people and preserve evidence while a matter is reviewed. Confidentiality will be maintained to the extent reasonably possible.

For the 2025 edition, the following operating point applies: Group medical cover is provided with a base annual family limit of ■5,00,000, subject to insurer terms.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

No employee should investigate a complaint independently, pressure a witness, delete relevant messages or retaliate against a person who participates. Findings and action will be based on the information available and the applicable process. False statements made knowingly and maliciously may be addressed, but an unsubstantiated good-faith report is not misconduct.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Hyderabad is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 23

Grievances and speak-up process

Policy overview and employee expectations

Employees are encouraged to raise workplace concerns early. Issues may relate to pay, workload, management conduct, discrimination, safety, policy interpretation or other employment matters. Employees may first approach their manager where appropriate, but may use People Operations or the speak-up channel if the manager is involved or the employee is uncomfortable.

A grievance should describe the issue, relevant dates, people involved, steps already taken and the outcome requested, if known. Supporting records may be provided securely. The company will acknowledge the concern, decide the appropriate route and provide updates where practical.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

Retaliation is prohibited. Employees should preserve relevant records and avoid sharing sensitive allegations broadly. Anonymous reports may be reviewed where sufficient information is available, although anonymity can limit the ability to investigate or provide feedback.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Mumbai is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 24

Health, safety and wellbeing

Policy overview and employee expectations

Employees must follow workplace safety instructions, report hazards and use equipment as intended. Emergency exits, first-aid arrangements and incident-reporting contacts are displayed at each office or customer site. Employees should not ignore unsafe conditions or perform work for which they are not trained.

Work-related injuries, near misses, ergonomic concerns and security incidents should be reported promptly. The company may arrange an assessment, provide guidance or refer the matter to an appropriate service. Employees should cooperate with reasonable safety reviews.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

Wellbeing resources may include counselling referrals, health awareness sessions and manager support. These resources do not replace emergency services or professional medical advice. Personal health information must be handled with care and only used for legitimate purposes.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Pune is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 25

Information security and acceptable use

Policy overview and employee expectations

Company devices, networks, applications and accounts are provided for authorised business use. Employees must use strong authentication, protect credentials, install approved updates and report suspected phishing, malware, loss or unauthorised access immediately.

Company data should be stored only in approved systems and shared with people who have a business need. Employees must not copy customer data to personal email, unapproved cloud storage or removable media. Confidential documents should be disposed of using approved methods.

For the 2025 edition, the following operating point applies: The standard employee notice period is 45 calendar days, subject to the employment letter.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: use the official HR or company system for requests and retain the confirmation. If the system and a written approval appear inconsistent, contact the policy owner before relying on the entry.

How the policy works in practice

The company may monitor systems and access logs for security, compliance and operational purposes, subject to applicable requirements and internal controls. Employees should have no expectation that company systems are private for personal use. Access may be suspended during an investigation or when a role changes.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Bengaluru is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 26

Privacy, records and artificial intelligence

Policy overview and employee expectations

Personal information about employees, candidates, customers and business contacts must be collected and used for legitimate, disclosed purposes. Employees should access only the information required for their role and follow retention, correction, deletion and incident-reporting procedures.

Employees must not enter confidential, personal, customer or regulated information into public AI tools unless the tool and use case have been approved. AI-generated content must be reviewed for accuracy, bias, confidentiality and intellectual-property concerns before it is used in business decisions or customer deliverables.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

Business records should be accurate, complete and retained according to the records schedule. Employees must not fabricate approvals, alter audit evidence or delete records subject to a legal hold or investigation. Questions about a new data use or AI tool should be referred to Information Security or the privacy contact.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Hyderabad is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 27

Customer service and quality

Policy overview and employee expectations

Employees must treat customers professionally, communicate clearly and protect customer information. Commitments about scope, price, delivery dates or service levels may be made only by employees with the appropriate authority. Issues that may affect a customer should be escalated promptly.

Project teams should maintain agreed plans, decision logs, risk registers and quality checks. Defects, service interruptions and missed commitments should be recorded accurately. Employees should not hide an issue to protect a metric or avoid a difficult conversation.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

Customer feedback should be reviewed constructively and used to improve service. Lessons learned may be shared internally after confidential or identifying details are removed where appropriate. Customer-specific procedures apply when they are consistent with company policy and applicable requirements.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Mumbai is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 28

Discipline, investigations and corrective action

Policy overview and employee expectations

The company may review suspected policy breaches, misconduct, security incidents or performance concerns. Reviews should be proportionate, impartial and documented. Employees may be asked to provide information and should cooperate honestly while respecting confidentiality.

Depending on the facts and applicable requirements, corrective action may include coaching, training, a written warning, restricted access, reassignment or separation. The company will consider seriousness, impact, prior conduct, consistency and any relevant mitigating circumstances.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

No action should be taken solely on rumour or an untested assumption. Employees should not destroy evidence, coordinate accounts with witnesses or interfere with a review. A person who raises a concern in good faith will not be penalised merely because the concern is not substantiated.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Pune is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 29

Resignation, notice and separation

Policy overview and employee expectations

Employees who resign should submit written notice through the prescribed channel. The required notice period is stated in the employment letter or applicable amendment. The manager and People Operations will confirm the last working day, handover expectations and any approved notice adjustment.

Before departure, employees must return company property, complete knowledge transfer, submit outstanding expenses, disclose open customer matters and cooperate with access closure. Final settlement is processed after required checks and within applicable timelines. Employees should keep contact and bank details current during the process.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

The company may end employment in accordance with the employment terms and applicable requirements. Exit discussions may be offered to understand workplace experience. Confidentiality, intellectual-property, data protection and other surviving obligations continue after employment ends.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Bengaluru is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

CHAPTER 30

Policy administration and definitions

Policy overview and employee expectations

People Operations is the policy owner for this handbook unless another owner is named. Finance owns payroll and expense procedures; Information Security owns security standards; the relevant committee or designated officer handles matters assigned to it. Policy owners should review content periodically and maintain a record of approved changes.

Words such as 'must' indicate a requirement; 'should' indicates an expected practice; and 'may' indicates discretion or a possible option. Examples are illustrative and do not create a separate entitlement. Headings are provided for navigation and do not change the meaning of the policy.

For the 2025 edition, employees and managers should apply this policy consistently across teams and locations, while taking account of role requirements and any more specific written procedure.

Employees should keep a copy of approvals, relevant system confirmations and supporting records. A conversation may help resolve a question, but where a policy requires approval, the approval should be recorded through the designated company channel.

Employee reminder: when in doubt, ask the relevant manager or policy owner and keep the decision documented.

How the policy works in practice

The company may amend, replace or withdraw policies prospectively, subject to applicable law, employee agreements and required consultation or notice. The current controlled copy is maintained by People Operations. Printed or downloaded copies may become outdated and should be checked against the controlled version.

Practical example: an employee should first check the applicable team procedure, submit the request with the information needed for review, and wait for confirmation where prior approval is required. The manager should assess the request against the policy criteria, explain any refusal or modification and record the decision.

Manager and control responsibilities: managers must apply the same criteria to comparable cases, avoid informal exceptions that cannot be explained, and escalate uncertain cases to the policy owner. People Operations or the relevant control function may review records to confirm that the process was followed.

Questions and exceptions: employees should raise questions before taking an action that may affect pay, leave, customer delivery, access to information or workplace safety. Exceptions require a documented business reason and approval from the role authorised to grant them. An exception in one case does not create an automatic entitlement in another case.

Illustrative scenario: A team member in Hyderabad is unsure how this chapter applies to a customer project. The employee checks the current handbook, confirms any client-specific rule with the manager, and asks the policy owner if two requirements appear to conflict. The manager records the guidance and ensures that the employee is not asked to bypass a company control.

Related records may include the employment letter, HR system entry, manager approval, policy FAQ, training acknowledgement or case record. Only records relevant to the matter should be accessed or shared.

APPENDIX A

2025 policy schedule – key figures

The following summary is provided for quick reference. The detailed chapter text and the employee's written employment terms remain important.

Policy item	2025 rule
Annual leave entitlement	20 working days per completed leave year
Annual leave carry-forward cap	7 days
Sick leave entitlement	10 days
Casual leave entitlement	6 days
Partner leave	Maternity leave is administered in accordance with applicable statutory requirements; eligible non-birthing partners receive 10 working days of paid partner leave.
Hybrid work guideline	Up to 3 remote-working days per week may be approved for eligible roles, subject to team coverage and manager approval.
Eligible overtime treatment	Eligible employees receive approved overtime compensation at 1.5 times the ordinary hourly rate, or approved compensatory time where permitted.
Expense submission deadline	Expense claims should be submitted within 45 calendar days of the transaction.
Annual learning support	Annual learning support is up to ■25,000 per eligible employee, subject to approval.
Group medical cover	Group medical cover is provided with a base annual family limit of ■5,00,000, subject to insurer terms.
Standard probation	The standard probation period is 4 months; one extension of up to 2 months may be approved in writing.
Standard employee notice	The standard employee notice period is 45 calendar days, subject to the employment letter.
Late-work meal cap	Meal reimbursement for approved late work is capped at ■350 per eligible day.
Domestic hotel guideline	Domestic hotel reimbursement guideline: up to ■5,000 per night in metro locations and ■3,500 in other locations, subject to approval.
Wellbeing reimbursement	Employees may claim up to ■4,000 per year for approved wellbeing activities.

APPENDIX B

Definitions, contacts and document control

Employee: A person engaged by Nexora under an employment agreement, excluding independent contractors unless a policy expressly includes them.

Manager: The employee's formally assigned people manager or another authorised delegate.

People Operations: The company function responsible for employee records, policy administration and employee support.

Policy owner: The function accountable for maintaining a policy and answering interpretation questions.

Working day: A scheduled workday for the employee's assigned location, excluding applicable weekly rest days and holidays.

Confidential information: Non-public business, customer, employee, technical, financial or operational information that must be protected.

Approved system: A company-authorised application or platform used to submit, record or approve a business process.

Document control

Document: Nexora Technologies Employee Handbook 2025
Version: 1.0
Effective date: 1 January 2025
Owner: People Operations
Review cycle: annual or when a material business or legal change requires review
Status: fictional training document; not an actual company policy

Important notice

Nexora Technologies Private Limited is fictional. This handbook is created solely for software development, retrieval testing, classroom demonstrations and evaluation of RAG or Agentic RAG systems. It is not legal advice and must not be used as an actual employment policy. The fictional policy figures are not a statement of Indian law. Real organisations must obtain appropriate legal and HR review before adopting any policy.